ABSTRACT

The doctoral research is oriented to the study of the phenomenon of the constitution of networks of exchange of significant knowledge in the field of oral health in the Rómulo Gallegos University, having as a specific academic context the Dentistry Area. The purpose of the research was the construction of a reflective discourse about the relevance of these networks as a strategy for comprehensive, citizen and professional training. The research was conducted from the post-positivist paradigm, it was oriented from the phenomenological perspective based on hermeneutics. As a technique for the collection of information, the interview modality known as the focal discussion group was used, which allowed for a comprehensive interpretive orientation on the phenomenon under study. The setting of the dialogical interaction was the headquarters of the Dentistry Area. The selected informant subjects were: three teachers, a worker with administrative functions and a community spokesperson, qualitative research, categorized classification and validation through triangulation. The result is a reflective construct that raises the experience of constitution of the networks of exchange of healthy knowledge has been complex and diverse, with expansive moments, stagnation and re-impulse, in any case it has been of high significance for university life.
