Human Rights and the Social Reinsertion Process In the Venezuelan Penitentiary System

ABSTRACT

The following research constitutes a latent intellectual incitement as a researcher, the purpose of which is to reveal the implied ontological categories of Human Rights and the process of social reintegration in the context of the General Directorate of Regions for the Assistance to graduates and with benefits of the Venezuelan Penitentiary System, assumes from the ontoepistemological perspective, the comprehensive and interpretive, disciplined and systematic phenomenology to derive knowledge about that experience, where the information collection techniques were observation and in-depth interview, applied to three (03) test delegates who acted as informant subjects, being the research scenario, the Supervised Residence Center "Gral. Ezequiel Zamora" from San Juan de los Morros in the Guárico State, accompanied by the guiding instrument of the interview, from a perspective of reflection and phenomenological-hermeneutic investigative understanding. Ergo, in the process of social reintegration, the procedural measures or benefits must be complied with with the use of social management indicators that reflect in and from everyday life that the graduate was reintegrated into society even when they continue to maintain criminal patterns, which It meant generating a theoretical framework for the interpretation of the legal spheres on Human Rights and the process of social reintegration of those deprived and deprived of liberty, inspired by the rights and freedoms fundamental to human existence, because they cannot be denied or withdrawn because a person has committed a crime or broken a law.
