Civic-Military Integration, From Community Development In A Social Quadrant.

ABSTRACT

Leading participation allows decision-making and public management to develop conflict scenarios, knowing the reality that exists in the environment, the capabilities of the people are required and with the organization of the Bolivarian National Armed Forces to avoid destabilizing groups that seek hinder development in public management, it is difficult to keep conflicts away, as a consequence, it is important to establish and formulate public policies to strengthen Popular Power, a participatory action research methodology is assumed, from a qualitative-quantitative approach. With a socio-critical paradigm, the lack of citizen participation, apathy, bureaucratism is a phenomenon that today is a barrier in the processes of civil-military integration, with the general objective, to develop a methodological strategy for civil-military integration from the community development in a social quadrant in the community of San Martín de Porres, Libertador municipality, empirical methods such as observation and interview were used to capture the problems and the results were developed through analysis, synthesis, historical and logical that allowed resolve the strategy through an action plan. In conclusion, integrating the Bolivarian National Armed Forces with the community is a task of precision and strategy that allows breaking paradigms to strengthen community development. It is interesting that these two societies work in synergy to achieve better benefits in the community by strengthening sectors such as health, education, security, public services and socio-productive matters.
